Book Reviews

3 ATENEO L.J. 215 (1954)

The following book reviews appear in this issue:

(1) Vicente J. Francisco, The Law Governing Labor Disputes in the Philippines (1954).

The Book is a comprehensive take on labor-management relations in the country. It presents various labor laws and statutes; discusses related Philippine and American jurisprudence; and includes notable rules, regulations, and interpretative bulletins of various labor departments and agencies.

(2) Maurice J. Fitzgerald, Handbook of Criminal Investigation (Paul Weston, 1951).

The Book discusses the basic principles of criminal investigation. Unlike other books which cater to specialists in the field, it aims to be a handy reference on ordinary techniques that cover topics such as interrogation, scene-of-the-crime procedure, and apprehension of the accused. Each chapter ends with a list of questions to test the reader's understanding of the material.

(3) Quentin Reynolds, Courtroom (1950).

The Book tells the story of Samuel F. Leibowitz, one of America's most renowned defense attorneys. It looks not only at his life as a practicing counsel but also as a member of the judiciary by presenting the various trials where he served in either capacity. Special attention is given to the controversial case of the Scottsborro Negroes where he defended and won on behalf of nine Negro boys who were accused of raping two white girls.
